

January 12, 2010

Irondequoit start-up took home a best-of award from CES

Matthew Daneman
Staff writer

Irondequoit technology start-up company Tenrehte Technologies took home a Best of the Consumer Electronics Show award in the category of "green tech" for its Picowatt wi-fi smart plug.

The gadgets plug into products such as appliances and allow for monitoring of their electricity consumption and controlling them remotely.

The massive Consumer Electronics Show was held Thursday through Sunday in Las Vegas. The event features manufacturers from around the world showing off their latest gadgets and gizmos.

The Best of CES Awards are given out by online site CNET. Other best-of winners this year included Panasonic's 3D plasma TV, the VT25 series; the Motorola Backflip smartphone; and Ford Motor Co.'s MyTouch in-vehicle touchscreen technology interface.

For more on the best of CES, visit <http://ces.cnet.com/best-of-ces/>"><http://ces.cnet.com/best-of-ces/>.
MDANEMAN@DemocratandChronicle.com
